PRACTICE EMPHASIS

Family Law and Appeals

After graduating from Wake Forest University School of Law, Will served as a Judicial Clerk for North Carolina Court of Appeals Judge Valerie Zachary where he researched cases and law, analyzed legal arguments, and assisted in drafting written opinions. The rhetorical acumen he garnered while working in Judge Zachary's chambers led to him leaving his home state for a career in family law here in downtown Seattle.

Clients regularly praise the writing Will does in their cases—toeing the line between persuasive and succinct prose, and capturing the essence of what each client needs. An avid writer in his spare time, Will has been published by reputable law reviews across the country. His areas of interest cover a range of topics, from family law and equity to rhetoric and civil procedure. Will's undergraduate degree (B.A. in Music and a Minor in English) offers some insight into his creative nature and articulate sense of communication.

Will brings that experience, his creative abilities, and his strong communication skills to a family law practice where he connects with clients, ensures their experiences are clearly communicated, and tenaciously advocates on their behalf. His patience and thoughtful counseling has helped many clients navigate their sometimes-difficult journey through the complex family dynamics of divorce.
